The Poultry Cross, Salisbury, formerly styled the Yarn Market, as distinguished from Barnard's Cross and the Cheese Market, independent of its intrinsic beauty, has been made an object of considerable dispute among antiquaries with respect to its origin and identity. The building is of hexagonal shape, and is supported by buttress piers at the angles, flattened ogee arches, and over each arch is a niche. There is a column in the centre, the capital of which is formed by six demi-angels with shields facing the six arches.
